The Human Capital Theory

Atlanta, Georgia: Ryan Shepard of Atlanta, Georgia is excited to announce the launch of The Human Capital Theory.

The Human Capital Theory is a movement that hopes to create engaging and responsible approaches to community-based economic development. HCT began as a way to solve for two related problems: professionals and business owners want to become more engaged in building better communities but don't know how, and, second, many of America's most overlooked communities stand to benefit the most from the skills and resources that local professionals and leaders can offer. HCT seeks to break down the walls between these groups.

In the time to come, HCT will share stories of people working together to achieve great successes, provide a forum to discuss issues that most afflict our communities, and present opportunities for the public to directly engage with the work.

What happens when people, businesses, and institutions collaborate to build stronger community-based economies? Join HCT and help us find out just how far the possibilities can reach.
